

been separated Irish against Irish. If we look at what the MacBride Principles do, they don't go as far as the sanctions against South Africa. Section 4 of the MacBride Principles says nothing in the act shall be construed to require to dispose of existing investments. We're not talking about a disinvestment policy. What we're talking about is compiling that and being...compiling the human rights violations of those corporations who are doing business in Northern Ireland. We're talking about knowing whether or not these corporations adhere to basic human rights, human rights that we all, as we sit here, have taken...taken for granted and will continue to take for granted, that simply do not exist because you happen to worship God in one way or the other in Northern Ireland, and, frankly, there's a lot more than religion going on there, it's simply a matter of loyalty or nonloyalty to the crown of the foreign country. And that is what's going on there now, and people are dying. As we sit here today, we will see more people getting injured. We will see more deaths go on in the next year while we're waiting to not do some good or do some good. And the MacBride Principles may have no impact whatsoever but they are a peaceful, nonviolent proposed solution or at least some pressure to call attention to a horrible wrong that has been going on since 1969. The violence has been going on since before many of the Pages were born, and we've turned an eye and Senator Landis has told us we should turn an eye again. Let's worry about it next year because what goes on over there is too far distant for us to imagine. I suggest to you that those...those of us who do have some Irish ancestry, who do follow the issue, know that there's a problem, think something should be done and even if it's this little, small thing, which is almost an...which is almost a voluntary act on the part of the state investment officer as opposed to the heavy sanctions that are...that are trying to be reversed in 1966, it's something that we can do. I suggest that small steps should be taken. I don't think it's anything that's...that's going to send corporations running crazy because we...we call attention to the fact that they are taking advantage of...of a portion of the Irish population that's being downtrodden right now in a portion of Ireland. I think the MacBride Principles are sound and I intend to support them.

PRESIDENT ROBAK: Thank you, Senator Lindsay. Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Members of the Legislature, Senator Landis is a very capable speaker and what he said would be very good if he
